

happy “supposed to be” anniversary my love! here’s a short letter for you!

i truly believe that loving someone is never a waste of energy, time, or even love. it’s given that it hurts to love sometimes, but let’s give credits to ourselves— we’re only two young people trying to navigate life with our heart on our sleeves. loving someone is truly not a waste because i still cherish the letter and the printed photo cards you gave to me, whether it is material things or not, i carry your love with every step i take.

even if i’m busy with what life has been throwing at me lately, i hope your day is kind to you. i hope you find hope with how the sun embraces you with warmth. i hope the air feels lighter and safer for you. i hope you get to satisfy your cravings with every meal i eat without you. i hope small unexpected joy find their way to you like how we treat stepping on a penny as “lucky”.

know that with every good moment that i have you cross my mind, i wonder if you’re having a good day as much as i do.

i love you so much, thank you for allowing me to exist in the same space with you, its really a privilege to be so known by you.

i long for you and know that i am always yours just the way the moon belongs with the sun